JUDGE COOPER'S ISLAND IS PRODUCTIVE OF FIERCE CRABS

Thrilling Adventures of Men Who Go to Hunt Cocoanuts

FANNING ISLAND, Sept. 16.—Paul Rougier, brother of the Rev. Father Rougier, owner of this island, and a Samoan boatman named Liga have just returned from a trip of exploration to Palmyra Island, some eighty miles to the north, whither they went some three weeks ago. The men sailed in Rougier's "catboat," which has covered thousands of miles throughout the Pacific and on which they were compelled to live all the time they were at Palmyra, owing to the presence there of thousands of monster land crabs. The men themselves arrived sorely in need of medical attendance owing to the bites and lacerations they had received and they are now under the care of Dr. Rancho of the German Improvement company, the prospective owners of Fanning Island.

The two men left here with the hope of gathering sufficient cocoanuts about Palmyra Island to pay for the sending of a schooner from San Diego for it was reported last year by sailors skirting the coast that the fruit was to be found in great abundance at Palmyra. The catboat was well provisioned, for the men were not sure what they might find in the way of food; but no medicines were taken along, and only a very small amount of ammunition for the two rifles they always carried with them on trips among the islands of the Pacific seas.

Tells Story From Bed.
Liga, the Samoan, is too ill to talk much of the adventure, but Mr. Rougier, in bed at the priest's house tells vividly of the terrible inhabitants of Palmyra.

"After a four day's sail," he says, "we arrived in the large lagoon which is formed by the many islands of the group which goes under the singular title of Palmyra. It was about sunset, but as we saw a number of nice little oves we decided to run our boat in close and tie up to the trees or perhaps go ashore and stretch ourselves out on the sands. We were perhaps an hour in getting our boat into the cove we had chosen, and it was quite dark when Liga jumped into shallow water and lashed our craft to a great broken stump on a rather high bank. When he pulled the rope taut a part of the bank projected out over the boat.

"At once we built a little fire upon the shore and were soon making coffee. We were very tired, for the past eight or ten hours had been very rough with our boat, and with a bite or two to eat we thought of early turning in upon the cool, damp ground. But this notion was not entertained for any great length of time.

"I was lying upon the ground, watching Liga working about the little fire, when I felt something jump upon my arm, and the next instant there was a sharp bite into my neck at the right side a little below the ear. I yelled, of course, and shook the thing off, and jumping to my feet saw that it was a monster land crab, the largest I had ever seen. I had up to the time seen in all my experience in the Southern seas. If there had been only the one we would not have cared so much, but instead of that there were dozens all about us, and before I had really recovered from my fright I saw as many as four or five of the big fellows running up Liga's body, biting his hands and snapping their long nippers into his neck and face. He was twisting and turning about like a crazy man, fighting the things with his hands and striking at them with the iron frying pan which he had been holding over the fire.

"I was satisfied at a glance that we were no match for the hordes of crabs that were upon us, and I called to Liga to make a jump for the boat, which was not more than five paces away, under the little overhanging bank. At the same time crushing under my feet the big fellow that had attacked me first, I ran for the boat and made for the little deck cabin in which our guns were lashed.

Boat Overrun.
"I nearly fainted when I saw that the boat was already overrun with the miserable creatures. They were so thick in the cabin that it was simply out of the question for me to unsling our guns and dig up the necessary ammunition. Besides, I did not see just then what good the rifles would be to us, for the things were so numerous, crawling everywhere about and upon us that we could not possibly shoot them all.

"So I grabbed up the axe lying on the deck and ran to Liga's aid on the shore; but in the meantime he had decided that the only thing to do was to get out into the water, and by the little light of our fire I could see him standing waist high in the water fighting off two or three of the crabs that had fastened themselves upon his arms and back. He howled with pain, as he told me afterward, but I did not hear him, for I was doing the same thing myself.

"But I was sure his plan was a good one, and I too rushed into the water. One of the monsters clung to my back, right between my shoulder blades, and though I ducked myself under water he seemed to be only getting a better hold. Finally, freed of the crabs from his own body, but bleeding as though he had been cut by a hundred bayonets, Liga came to my assistance and cut with his pocket knife the creature from my back. In doing so, however, he left one of the monster's nippers in the flesh, and it is this wound which is now causing me the greatest pain and the doctor the most trouble.

Preferred the Water.
"In spite of the fact that both of us were bleeding freely and were very soaked in the water, as well as hungry for we had had nothing to eat from about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, we did not dare approach our boat. The latter was by this time simply covered with the creatures and we were already wondering when we might be able to climb aboard. We stood in the water some hours listening to the noises and movements on the catboat and upon shore. When Liga complained that he was becoming weak and could not stand it in the water much longer, I too had felt the same way, but had not said anything, for I knew that Liga was much more severely bitten than I had been and must be much weaker from loss of blood. But when he told me how he felt I waded along the shore some distance and found what I thought was a quiet place, free from the creatures. At least I heard no noises and saw none of them, so I returned and Liga came back with me.

"During the remainder of the night we remained at this new spot and I think we both fell asleep. However, we were both aroused at about the same moment by crabs crawling over us. It was daylight, and we could see under and in the trees hundreds and hundreds of the fierce things, and I speak only the truth when I say that I never in all my life was so disheartened.

"Poor Liga was a red man now covered with bites from head to foot. He wore no shoes and his feet were terribly bitten and swollen. I certain did pity him; but as a matter of fact I was in very poor condition myself, my arms so stiff that I could scarcely raise them and a piercing pain all down my back.

"But we had to do something, and the sooner the better, for we were both very weak from several causes. So we waded back to our places of the night before, and finding the axe where I had dropped it and securing by a quick dash the heavy wrench in the cabin, we began a battle with the crabs on the catboat, which we had previously cut adrift.

"When we had rid the catboat of the creatures we were too fatigued to eat or think of eating, and we let the boat drift about the lagoon while we slept. During the following evening we cleaned up our little vessel, dressed our many wounds as best we could and cooked and rested. We made a hurried trip ashore for some of the things we had left, but as we were not anxious for a repetition of our fearful experience we stayed with our boat during the remainder of our week's stay. When we had recovered sufficiently to attempt the homeward journey we came by easy stages by way of Washington, Gilmore and Irish Islands, putting in a couple of days at each."

"CASCARETS" FOR A SICK, SOUR STOMACH

Gently but thoroughly cleanse and regulate your Stomach, Liver and Bowels while you sleep.

That awful sourness, belching of acid and foul gases; that pain in the pit of the stomach; the heartburn, nervousness, nausea, bloating after eating, feeling of fullness, dizziness and sick headache, means a disordered stomach, which cannot be regulated until you remove the cause. It isn't your stomach's fault. Your stomach is as good as any.

Try Cascarets; they immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. Then your stomach trouble is ended. A Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular for months. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

TURKS WIN ONE SCRAP

(Associated Press Cable)
CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 1.—Nazim Pasha, commander-in-chief of the Turkish army in Thrace, reported tonight that the army has recaptured the city of Bunar Hisar. Also that he had defeated the Bulgarian army in the vicinity of Visa.

Over-Night FEDERAL Wireless To the Advertiser

Details of the great battle in Thrace are given by the Reichpost's correspondent at the front. The Bulgarian staff chose the neighborhood of Luleburgas, the center of gravity. There fore, all their available strength near Adrianople as well as the greater part of the forces were concentrated there. The sinking of the Turkish battleship Fethiye by a Greek torpedo boat today in the Gulf of Salonica is confirmed in a dispatch received in Constantinople from Salonica. The commander, three engineers and four bluejackets were thrown into the water and rescued by fishing boats. The boilers of the Fethiye exploded as she sank. It is understood that the Bulgarian army, in following up its success, will advance on Constantinople. The Balkan allies will not accept an armistice, but are willing to negotiate peace directly with Turkey.

Consolidation of the quartermaster, pay and commissary departments of the army into the new quartermaster corps, as authorized by Congress during its last session, is to materialize.

The general election on which the fate of Cuban independence is believed to depend, opened auspiciously today. The voting began at six o'clock and continued until sundown. Many voters awaiting the opening of the polls to cast their ballots were compelled to disperse by the police and troops.

The Matson Navigation Company announced today that the big steamship for which the contract was let recently will be named Matsonia, and that the other liner, contracted for a few days ago, will be named the Manoa.

The remaining indictments against Louis Glass, vice-president of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company were dismissed by Superior Judge Lawlor today. The indictments were seven in number and are of the so-called "graft prosecutions."

Noon today witnessed the closing of the Hotel Metropole, from which Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, stepped to be shot to death last July. George Considine, who had been running the house in the interests of his creditors, said the closing is directly due to the murder.

"Too much notoriety," he declared, "has driven away patronage."

Secretary Nagel, of the department of commerce and labor, in a speech last night, declared that the record of the Taft administration was the chief argument for its continuance. Protection is the policy under which the nation has prospered, he said.

Greatly pleased at the reception accorded him at Madison Square Garden, Woodrow Wilson left this morning for Rochester, New York. Governor Wilson confessed that for the first time in his life he was rattled last night. The sixty-two minutes of cheering so affected him that he forgot his prepared speech and delivered another one.

"We have already won, whatever is the result of the balloting next Tuesday. The Progressive party has been founded and put on a lasting basis. This is the statement of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, who attended the Progressive rally at Madison Square Garden tonight, at which Oscar Strauss, Progressive candidate for Governor of New York, was the principal speaker.

With 2000 representative citizens of Africa marching ahead of the hearse, despite a heavy rain, a flower-covered casket containing the body of the late James Schoolcraft Sherman, Vice-President of the United States, was taken from the Sherman home in Litch today to the grounds of the country court house, where it now lies in state.

The funeral is to be held tomorrow from the First Presbyterian church.

A San Francisco woman, listening at a party telephone, heard a neighbor ordering goods from a department store, and by merely using her name collected more than $400 worth of goods without payment.
